Learning Outcomes are measurable statements that describe knowledge or skills achieved by students upon completion of the program.

Students graduating from this program will be able to:

- Learn enough about the discipline in the ANTH F100X and ANTH F101X core courses to be interested in taking up anthropology as their primary field of study; students gain through what they learn in introductory courses and others a desire to learn more about the diversity of peoples and cultures and the human condition
- Have a basic understanding of the history of the discipline, including subdisciplinary perspectives and approaches to the study of culture, society, and human development
- Have an understanding of methods in anthropological research
- Have an understanding of cultural and linguistic diversity and the implications of cultural difference for understanding the human condition
- Explain disciplinary content using a variety of modes of communication, including oral and written communication
- Communicate to audiences in the discipline using appropriate disciplinary conventions
- Translate disciplinary content to audiences outside the discipline as appropriate, making disciplinary knowledge relevant to broader communities
- Integrate feedback from others to enhance or revise communication
- Students seeking employment will be satisfied that their education has provided useful skills, and/or will seek to continue their academic career by pursuing training in K-12 teacher education, law school, graduate school in social sciences or humanities, museum studies, or other field
